Palace of Light, Lucknow. Lucknow stands in a bend of the Gumti or Serpentine River. It is 49 miles from Cawnpore, 619 from Calcutta, 885 from Bombay. It has been the capital of Oudh since 1775, and its climate, its parks and gardens make it a charming place to visit. When the Kings of Oudh reigned here in barbaric splendour, showers of precious stones were scattered among the guests at their accession, but a long course of misrule resulted in the annexation of the province by the British in 1856.
